LOS ANGELES James Gandolfini, the barrel-chested actor forever known to millions of TV fans as mobster Tony Soprano on the HBO series “The Sopranos,” has died at the age of 51.

“Our hearts are shattered, and we will miss him deeply. He and his family were part of our family for many years, and we are all grieving,” said his managers, Mark Armstrong and Nancy Sanders, who confirmed that the actor passed away while on vacation in Rome.

HBO also released a statement: “We’re all in shock and feeling immeasurable sadness at the loss of a beloved member of our family. He was special man, a great talent, but more importantly a gentle and loving person who treated everyone no matter their title or position with equal respect. He touched so many of us over the years with his humor, his warmth and his humility. Our hearts go out to his wife and children during this terrible time. He will be deeply missed by all of us.”

Although he also starred in films like “Get Shorty” and “True Romance,” it was the iconic role of the soul-searching wiseguy on “The Sopranos” that earned Gandolfini fame and accolades. Over the course of the show’s six seasons, he picked up three Emmy Awards for lead drama actor, and the series was named the greatest TV series of all time by the Writers Guild of America earlier this month.

His charismatic performance of a conflicted bad guy paved the way for the current crop of antihero dramas that includes “Mad Men,” “Breaking Bad” and “Boardwalk Empire.”

“It was such an honor to work with Mr. Gandolfini and nothing but a pleasure to see him perform. He was one of the greatest.”

—Michael Roskam, director of James Gandolfini’s last film, “Animal Rescue,” a crime drama due out next year

Like the character he played, Gandolfini was a native son of New Jersey with strong ties to the old world. His father, James, was born in Borgotaro, Italy, and his mother, Santa, was American-born and raised in Italy.

After “The Sopranos,” Gandolfini stayed busy with a variety of film and theater projects, starring on Broadway in 2009 in “God of Carnage” and in movies that tended to trade on his tough-talking image, including “Zero Dark Thirty,” “In the Loop” and “Not Fade Away,” from “Sopranos” creator David Chase. He also returned several times to his creative home at HBO, producing the biopic “Hemingway & Gellhorn” and the documentary “Alive Day Memories: Home From Iraq,” and starring in “Cinema Verite,” about the Loud family.

This is summertime in one of the most beautiful cities in the world. Taking a long bike ride along the lake is just common sense.

Exploring the nooks and crannies of the different neighborhoods that make the city great is a good way to get to know someone and learn something new in the process.

Plus, with all of the money you've saved on gas, parking and the inevitable car wash you went through to impress your date, you're talking about a lot more funds available for having fun.

I can hear a few of the ladies now: "I would never ...!" Well, maybe you should. If a woman is down to go on a few bike dates, it means she's flexible, willing to step outside her comfort zone and doesn't take herself too seriously. Those sound like winning qualities to me!

Yes, you're still gonna need something with a motor when you're doing the fancy restaurant, theater or cocktail party. By no means am I advocating pedaling through the streets in a nice dress or creased slacks.

But for the less expensive, day-to-day outings, breaking out the bikes is not a bad option. And if your date doesn't have a bike of her own, just put her on the handlebars.

ANTHONY ROBERTS IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

It's my duty as a sweatmonster to speak for all of the other sweatmonsters out there: Say no to bikes on a first date.

I'm admittedly terrified of bikes and the idea of biking in Chicago—though I support you fully, bike community!—so of course I would be against this, right? Right. But it's also not all that logical to dismiss the idea that, hey, you worked hard to look good for your rendezvous and now you're about to melt it off, all in the name of a scenic ride on a jam-packed bike path along a dirty lake.

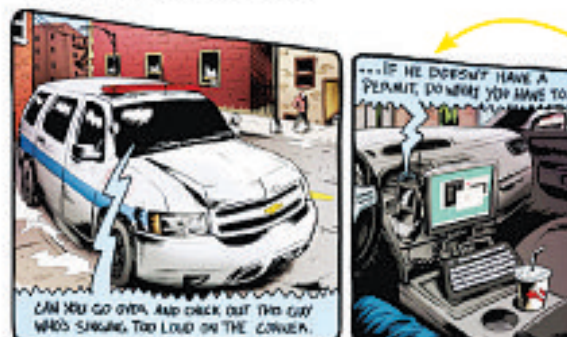

If you're a conscious biker, you're also going to be wearing a helmet. So unless you plan on keeping that thing on after you've dismounted (the bike ... minds out of the gutter!), your hair is DOA. Yes, these arguments are centered around vanity—sweating, stinking, looking fresh—so here's a real-world bomb for you: You won't even be able to talk to each other much until you stop, and if you do steal a chance to gab, you could become so distracted that you get doored/potheaded/clipped/any of those other terrible things that bikers endure.

If you really want to enjoy summertime outdoors that badly, do what the rest of us do: Drink beers on a stoop and then go for a long damn walk.

Student's body found

Austin Hudson-Lapore disappeared a week ago during thunderstorms

Hudson-Lapore

Chicago Tribune

A body discovered by a fisherman early Wednesday morning has been identified by family as that of Austin Hudson-Lapore, 20, a third-year University of Chicago biochemistry student.

Hudson-Lapore disappeared the evening of June 12, a week before his body was found near the 3900 block of South Lake Shore Drive.

Hudson-Lapore had taken his last final exam of the school year earlier in the day; his family said at a news conference Friday. His family said they were able to conclude, based on his computer use, that Hudson-Lapore likely left his apartment in the 5300 block of South Kimbark Avenue between 8:30 and 10 p.m.

Gregg LaPore, Hudson-Lapore's father, said his son was fascinated by weather and speculated the reason he might have dashed out of his apartment with nothing but his keys might have been to watch the storms that rolled into the city that night.

What actually happened that night still is under investigation. An autopsy is scheduled for Thursday.

The man who had gone to the lake to fish Wednesday morning, Eddie Hudson, 65, had

Gregg LaPore, father of University of Chicago student Austin Hudson-Lapore, 20, joined volunteers on a lakefront search for his son. JOHN J. KIM/TRIBUNE only cast one line when he looked to his right and noticed the body in the water.

"I saw a body, which I thought was a log," the fisherman said. "And I walked a little bit closer, then I thought it was a dummy ... I discovered it wasn't a dummy and then I called 911 and they sent the Fire Department, police out."

Karen Warren Coleman, vice president of Campus Life and Student Services at the university, released a statement Wednesday afternoon.

"Austin was a bright, promising student who was active on campus, had a great love for the outdoors, and was very engaged in the Shorey House community," Warren Coleman wrote. "The University community sends our deepest sympathy and condolences to Austin's family and his friends here at the University and across the country."

Hudson-Lapore's immediate family, who live in Albuquerque, N.M., said he was a happy person who talked with them on Skype for hours at a time. He had planned to work at a lab on campus, his father said at the press conference, so he could spend his last summer of college near his friends.

LaPore said that there was no reason to believe his son was distraught: "He's a smart, happy and outgoing young man who was fully engaged in his community."

Obama defends NSA strategy

BERLIN President Obama defended U.S. anti-terrorism tactics on a visit to Berlin on Wednesday, telling wary Germans that Washington was not spying on the emails of ordinary citizens and promising to step up efforts to close the Guantanamo Bay prison.

On the 50th anniversary of John F. Kennedy's famous "Ich bin ein Berliner" speech, Obama made his first presidential visit to the German capital, a favored destination of U.S. leaders during the Cold War.

He held talks with Chancellor Angela Merkel and gave a speech at the Brandenburg Gate in which he unveiled a proposal for new talks with Russia on slashing nuclear arms arsenals.

Obama, who attracted a crowd of 200,000 adoring fans when he last passed through in 2008 during his first campaign for the presidency, remains popular in Germany.

But revelations before the trip of a covert U.S. Internet surveillance program, code-named Prism, caused outrage in a country where memories of the eavesdropping East German Stasi secret police are still fresh.

Merkel said at a joint news conference that also touched on Afghanistan, Syria and the global economy, that the two leaders had held "long and intensive" talks on the spying issue, noting that some questions still needed to be cleared up.

President Obama speaks Wednesday at the Orangerie at Schloss Charlottenburg palace in Berlin. GETTY IMAGES

Obama tried to reassure his host, who as a pastor's daughter growing up in the communist East experienced the Stasi first-hand.

"This is not a situation in which we are rifling through the ordinary emails of German citizens or American citizens or French citizens or anybody else," Obama said.

"This is not a situation where we simply go into the Internet and start searching any way we want. This is a circumscribed system directed at us being able to protect our people, and all of it is done under the oversight of the courts."

NFL star not ruled out in homicide probe

Police have yet to rule out New England Patriots tight end Aaron Hernandez as a suspect in a homicide investigation in North Attleborough, Mass., WBZ-TV reported Wednesday. State police detectives returned Wednesday to Hernandez's home, near an industrial park where the body of a jogger was found Monday, and no one answered the door.

Williams apologizes for rape comment

Tennis star Serena Williams apologized Wednesday on her website for comments she made in a magazine interview about a rape case in Steubenville, Ohio. "I am currently reaching out to the girl's family to let her know that I am deeply sorry for what was written in the Rolling Stone article. What was written—what I supposedly said—is insensitive and hurtful, and I by no means would say or insinuate that she was at all to blame."

Muslims sue NYPD, alleging surveillance

New York Muslims have filed a federal lawsuit against the New York Police Department over the department's surveillance of Muslims. The public debate over government surveillance has crescendoed over the last two weeks after a leaker revealed that the federal government had secretly collected detailed phone records, on a massive scale, for years.

Afghanistan refuses peace talks

Afghan President Hamid Karzai said Wednesday his government would not join U.S. peace talks with the Taliban and halted negotiations with Washington on a troop pact, underscoring the fragile nature of hopes for a negotiated peace in Afghanistan.

THE HAT TRICK

WHAT'S BUZZIN' IN THE BLACKHAWKS' WORLD

THE DIGIT

650

That's the weight, in pounds, of an all-chocolate Blackhawks player created by pastry chef Alain Roby. He whipped it up in 2010 and has fixed it up for this year's Cup run.

THE MOUTHWATCH

"It's easy for guys on the outside to voice their opinion, they have no idea what's going on. It's unfortunate in the sense that the body of work Marian has shown and played through, there's no question guys support him 100 percent."

—Blackhawks forward Jamal Mayers, on those who criticize Marian Hossa's toughness

Powerless

Much has been written of the Blackhawks' power-play woes. Two stats pretty much say it all. Entering Game 4, the Hawks had not scored in 20 straight chances with the man advantage, while the Bruins had killed off 27 straight power plays.

BLACKHAWKS TIE STANLEY CUP FINAL WITH SOME SERIOUS FIREPOWER

Jonathan Toews looks for the puck in front of Boston's Zdeno Chara in the second period. US PRESSWIRE

THE STARTING LINE

» Elbow strain sidelines Tiger Woods until British Open » Bears hire former Arena League quarterback Mitchell Tanney as analytics director

Where are the Blackhawks' stars?

In Game 1 of the Stanley Cup Final, the Hawks grabbed a win with goals from four unlikely sources: Brandon Saad, Johnny Oduya, Andrew Shaw and Dave Bolland. Since then, the offense has been hauntingly quiet, especially the likes of Jonathan Toews, Patrick Kane and Marian Hossa.

Without contributions from their most potent offensive weapons, it's unlikely Hawks will trump Boston, whose best players have been fantastic this series.

Getting Hossa back for Wednesday's Game 4 after an injury sidelined him in Game 3 on Monday was only a good first step for the Hawks. Who would rise to the occasion and who would slink into the shadows? Here's the breakdown. REDEYE

FIRST PERIOD

Rising star: Jonathan Toews wins the opening faceoff! It's sad that this counts as a positive for the Hawks captain. But when you have just one goal all postseason, you look for any sign of life.

Falling star: After the Hawks dominate the first five minutes, Johnny Oduya saps the momentum by committing a penalty. Clean it up, mister.

Rising star: GOAL! Michal Handzus scores his first of the playoffs. And SHORTHANDED no less. We'd be remiss if we didn't acknowledge the Manchild's (that would be Brandon Saad) pretty pass to set it all up.

Rising star: Bryan Bickell knocks down Zdeno Chara. These two almost tore each other's heads off at the end of Game 3.

Falling star: Well, Saad's gotta take heat for this. He turns over the puck not once but twice, the second of which leads to a Bruins power play goal.

Score: Blackhawks 1, Bruins 1

Patrick Kane scores a goal in the second period. GETTY IMAGES

SECOND PERIOD

Rising star: Corey Crawford makes a terrific save reaching out with his stick to stuff Nathan Horton's putback attempt on a Bruins power play. Stick happens.

Rising star: GOAL! Toews taps one in off a shot from the point by Michal Rozsival. Captain Serious must have heard the whole city of Chicago yelling at him to show up.

Rising star: GOAL! What's this? First Toews scores, and then Kane finds the net?! It's a Hawks fan dream come true. Better late than never, boys.

Falling star: D'oh. Patrick Sharp's ill-advised clearing attempt leads to a Boston goal. You know better than that, Sharpie.

Rising star: GOAL! Marcus Kruger strikes on a sweet two-on-one with Michael Frolik. Tuukka Rask makes the initial save, but Krugs sticks with it and stuffs in the rebound.

Score: Blackhawks 4, Bruins 3

THIRD PERIOD

Falling star: Oduya lets 41-year-old Jaromir Jagr hold on to the puck for a day and a half, and he eventually feeds Patrice Bergeron for the Boston goal. Oduya's never going to hear the end of it.

Rising star: Bryan Bickell flies up the wing at cranks a slap shot ... that bangs off the post. Keep firing, big guy.

Rising star: GOAL! Sharp solves Rask ... on the power play, no less. We'll refrain from making an "it's about friggin' time" reference.

Falling star: Crawford gets beat on the glove side. Again. But this thumbs-down goes to NBC's announcers, who won't shut up about it.

Score: Blackhawks 5, Bruins 5

OVERTIME

Rising star: GOAL! Brent Seabrook blasts it past Tuukka Rask from way up top. All tied up heading back to Chicago. Holy. [Bleep].

1	Why are the Hawks having so much difficulty turning a profit?	"Diamond-crusted goblet giveaway night" may not have been the way to go.	Because beer sales are done halfway into triple-overtime playoff games.	It's easy to cook books in an ice rink.	Because it costs a small fortune to go to a game.	Likely due to the failure of the ill-conceived line of ice- and puck-flavored breakfast cereals.
2	Marian Hossa's pain threshold is being questioned. How would you define it?	Most patients indicate their pain between 1 and 10. Hockey players pick between 1 and 3.	As a much smarter insult than any said by Derrick Rose critics.	Because we should listen to Tony Amonte? Why?	Questioning injuries with no prior medical knowledge is the new normal. I wrote a column about it.	A hockey player's pain threshold is on par with passing a billiard ball-sized kidney stone while jogging.
3	The Hawks and "Chelsea Dagger" vs. the Bruins and "Kernkraft 400." Discuss.	Not necessary. Come on!	Hmmm, remind me what this "Chelsea Dagger" sounds like again.	They're both awful in their own special way.	"Kernkraft 400" is a great song except for when the Bruins score. I'll never look at it the same.	I thought they discontinued the Kernkraft 400 when that one blew up and set that house on fire.
4	Complaining about your bobsledding paycheck on Vine is like people who consider sending photos of your luge "sexting."	... complaining anywhere about a bobsledding check. No one cares.	... showing that most Olympians aren't doing it for the money. Wait, that's not funny.	You would think Lolo would be counting her blessings after being homeless at one point in her life.	... writing a mean letter to your track boss about your discus stipend.
5	Why did it take almost three months before Anthony Rizzo sat out a game for the Cubs?	It's this weird thing where he's a talented guy and he wants to play.	When you're 23 years old and play first base, you don't need much rest.	They tried to get him to break, but he refused.	Maybe the team realizes that if Rizzo is going to be the player Paul Konerko was, he'll need a break sometimes.	He saw who else was on the team.

Hawks' early training: smoking, sitting around

By Mick Swasko

REDEYE

Oh, Blackhawks, how far you've come.

In a simpler time, when sports chatter was confined to radio waves and ink on dead trees, the Blackhawks kissed their first Stanley Cup. The year was 1934, and hockey still was a novelty from up north, at least according to the pages of the recently digitally archived magazine called Chicagoan.

The University of Chicago Library recently was part of an effort to digitize the Jazz-age magazine, which mirrored the style of the New Yorker. Published from 1926-35, the publication ran the gamut on covering the Chicago scene, sports most certainly included.

As the Hawks look to add another set of names to the fabled Cup this season, the pages of the Chicagoan reveal some interesting—and bizarre—tales of the first championship team. Here are some highlights and a throwback-style guide to Chicago's (really) early hockey days.

» Patrick Kane solidified the final goal to win the Cup in 2010. The guy who slapped the final puck in the net in 1934? The extremely intimidating-sounding Mush March.

» Then-Hawks general manager Major Fred-eric McLaughlin literally was a target for Hawks players. He apparently stood scowling behind the enemy goal each game, causing one anonymous Hawks player to be quoted as saying, "Every time I go down to shoot, I see that horse face behind the goal and I want to shoot the puck right at it."

» This era's morning skates and practices at Johnny's Ice House were unheard of for the Blackhawks of old. An article credits McLaughlin for the novel idea of hiring trainers for the players. Before that, the article notes players' offseason training consisted of "smoking cigarettes and finding places to park their feet." It was so bad, the article says one of McLaughlin's managers advised against both running and walking, as it "would bring kinks to their leg muscles."

» One journalist for the Chicagoan had to humble himself after the Hawks took the Cup for the first time. "Wronger than hell" was the way writer Kenneth D. Fry described his predictions. He thought the Hawks would break even at best on the season.

CLASSIC YET MODERN, DAIQUIRIS ARE SUMMER'S 'IT' DRINK—NO UMBRELLAS NECESSARY

By Kate Bernot | REDEYE

Think back to the last time you wore a plastic lei—on spring break or a cruise ship, perhaps? Chances are, you also were drinking a frozen pink daiquiri with enough sugar to make you twitch. The daiquiri, which historically was a three-ingredient mix of rum, lime juice and sugar, has lost sight over the last few decades of its roots as a simple, sweet-tart refresher. But a recent trend toward pared-down, fewer-ingredient cocktails means more Chicago bartenders are rediscovering the tropical drink's origins. "In America, you think of a daiquiri and you think of a slushie machine. It was kind of bastardized in the '80s by Chili's and TGI Fridays," said Justin Anderson, beverage manager at Fulton Market's South American-inspired restaurant La Sirena Clandestina. "But really, you can have very simple ingredients and make a great daiquiri." Though they're ditching sugar-loaded mixes in favor of fresh limes and high-quality rum, bars aren't all serving up the same riff on the drink. From classic presentations to habanero- and watermelon- flavored versions, allow the daiquiri to reintroduce itself.

KBERNOT@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEYEEATDRINK

» HEMINGWAY DAIQUIRI

($12) at Big Jones 5347 N. Clark St. 773-275-5725

Based on the style of daiquiri that was a favorite of writer (and epic drinker) Ernest Hemingway at Cuban bar El Floridita, this drink has been a part of Big Jones' menu since the Andersonville restaurant expanded its bar program two months ago. "I've come to respect Ernest Hemingway as a drinker as much as a writer, not just because of the heroic amount that he was supposed to be drinking, but because he drank well," beverage director Andrew Shay said. To prepare the Hemingway daiquiri, Shay shakes anejo rum and lime juice (but not sugar) with ice, grapefruit juice and a few drops of earthy-but-sweet maraschino liqueur, then strains it into a rocks glass. "If a drink is associated with Ernest Hemingway, it's good," Shay said. "You just trust him."

HAND-SHAKEN DAIQUIRI »

($11-$12) at La Sirena Clandestina
954 W. Fulton Market 312-226-5300

Beverage director Justin Anderson wants to upgrade your strawberry daiquiri. Guys, this means you, too. There's nothing frilly about this compulsively drinkable blend of two rums—a 5-year-aged rum and light rum—shaken with strawberry preserves and fresh-squeezed Mexican lime juice served over snow cone-style crushed ice. "We try to find ways to make pedestrian cocktails taste great," Anderson said, citing their harmony with the Fulton Market restaurant's simply prepared Latin dishes. "The daiquiri is a very basic cocktail, but we took it a step further." La Sirena's daiquiri also is available without the preserves for fruit-phobes, but at the height of strawberry season in the Midwest, ordering it with the extra flavor is a no-brainer.

HILARY HIGGINS/REDEYE FILE

» DAIQUIRI

($10) at Billy Sunday
3143 W. Logan Blvd. 773-661-2485

Served over a dramatic ski slope of crushed ice, the passion fruit-laced daiquiri at this Logan Square restaurant and cocktail bar is all about the rum—or rums, in this case. Beverage director Alex Bachman uses two types of rum—an overproof rum and a rum agricole—of varying alcohol levels as the drink's base, then adds passion fruit syrup, pineapple bitters and lots of ice. "When you're using 100- and 150-proof rum, [the daiquiri] can stand to take a little more ice or water. In our case, it probably needs it," Bachman said. The fruit notes play a supporting role to the spirits' flavors, which Bachman says is truer to a real daiquiri. "We're really beginning to understand these tropical cocktails again. Originally, the daiquiri was just a celebration of great Cuban rum."

BRITTANY SOWACKE/REDEYE

» SANDIA DAIQUIRI

($11) at Takito Kitchen 2013 W. Division St. 773-687-9620

"What did I think of when I thought 'summer' and 'daiquiris'?" Takito Kitchen's beverage director Adam Weber said. "I thought 'watermelon.'" The Mexican-influenced Wicker Park restaurant adds freshly juiced watermelon to a base of Brugal rum, a brand known for its drier character, then mixes in maraschino liqueur and piloncillo, which is Mexican sugar cane juice in solid form. Lastly, deviating from tradition, Weber swaps lime juice for lemon juice, which he said better complements the watermelon. While all this sounds like a new-school interpretation of the daiquiri, Weber emphasizes it's still a balanced pyramid of rum, citrus and a sweetener. "I wanted to create something that was really straight-forward and approachable. The watermelon presence is there but is balanced out nicely by the dry rum."

» CLAIM JUMPER

($10) at Bub City
435 N. Clark St. 312-610-4200

While the city holds its breath waiting for Molly, Jerrod and R.J. Melman and cocktail director Paul McGee to open tiki bar Three Dots and a Dash below Bub City, fans can catch a preview of his tropical style in the form of this daiquiri variation at the River North barbecue restaurant. Beginning with an aged white rum, McGee adds subtle tartness with a pineapple drinking vinegar, made by Portland-based Pok Pok restaurant, and some back-of-the-throat spice courtesy of a habanero shrub, a mild alcoholic liquid that also contains vinegar. "I didn't want you to go, 'Wow, that's a really hot drink.' I just wanted to give it a bit of lingering flavor," McGee said, adding that the spice and the drink's pineapple flavors play off the barbecue food served at Bub City. Of course, this is just the beginning; McGee teases to more daiquiris and tiki treats to come at Three Dots and a Dash this summer.

NIGHTCRAWLERS

SEEN ON THE SCENE AT SPYBAR, 646 N. FRANKLIN ST.

It was all about beats and basslines at last weekend's Spring Awakening Music Festival. We hit up an after-party to find out what happens when Dirty South meets the Midwest. CRAIG SEYMOUR FOR REDEYE

Orville Kline 26, DJ

What are you drinking and why?

I'm drinking Coronas because I just drank about eight shots of Jameson. I'm trying to slow down.

Do you have any rules about drinking when you DJ?

Just don't drink so much to the point where you [bleep] up. You have to drink a little bit, but not too much.

Who would make a better DJ: Amanda Bynes or Lindsay Lohan?

Lindsay Lohan because she knows how to party.

Jorge Sotelo

28, retail

Your jacket has EDM on the back. Did you make it yourself?

I make all of my outfits for festivals, concerts, anywhere.

What do you say to people who hate EDM?

EDM is the best, and EDM is not B96 or KISS FM. EDM is all the cool underground DJs out there.

What are you drinking and why?

I'm drinking Red Bull and vodka, because it makes me hyper. I want to dance. I want to do it all night long.

Alex Boyle

22, hostess

What are you drinking and why?

Well, I'm not drinking anything yet. But I'll have a shot of tequila. I'm going to get [bleeped] up and have an awesome time.

If you were a DJ, what's the one song you'd play right now?

Anything from the new Daft Punk album.

Someone just thought you were Miley Cyrus. How do you feel about that?

I'm slightly not OK with it because it's Miley Cyrus. But she's viewed as very attractive, so I'm flattered.

Cool things for summer cooking

BILL HOGAN/
TRIBUNE PHOTOS

Mason Tumbler

$12.99 (suggested retail) at retailers nationwide or aladdin-pmi.com

Keep your cool—and your coolers cold—this summer with help from a Mason Tumbler from Aladdin. The 20-ounce insulated blue-tinted mug works well with lemonade, smoothies or something more potent (we're thinking strawberry margaritas). It features a metal lid, no BPA, a no-sweat exterior and a smoothie-friendly straw. To help make the season's livin' easy, it's also dishwasher safe.

Sauce Pot & Basting Brush Set

$21.95 for the set at surlatable.com and stores

Dedicated barbecue utensils make life easy for a busy grill-master, which makes Sur La Table's Sauce Pot & Basting Brush Set a fine addition to your grill-side tool kit. The small cast-iron pot (it holds about 1 1/2 cups) can sit on the grill to keep basting sauces warm. It retains heat well, so use a grill mitt or glove. The brush has a heat-resistant (to 450 degrees F) silicone head for basting.

Kitchen Gloves $39.99 for a set of two at shoptrudeau.com

Get a grip on hot stuff (up to 482 degrees F) with these Kitchen Gloves from Trudeau. They're heat- and flame-resistant, so they are good for prolonged handling of hot items. Silicone patterning improves the grip, flexible fabric enhances dexterity, and the size provides wrist and forearm protection. But they're not waterproof, so don't use when wet. For grill cooking or kitchen tasks (say, draining bacon grease from a hefty iron skillet), we found them easier to work with than kitchen mitts. —CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Stoker

"Stoker" is a visual treat from the creative opening credits to the colorful splendor of nature that's almost blinding. It's almost brilliant enough to distract from a plot that has some very dark problems. Mia Wasikowska turns in a creepy performance as India, a young woman who just turned 18 and has lived an emotionally confined life. That world gets even smaller and darker when her father dies in an automobile accident. The arrival of Charles Stoker (Matthew Goode), an uncle she never knew existed, could be the spark she needs to come out of her emotional cocoon. The film's big question is whether she will emerge as a beautiful butterfly or killer moth, and it can't be perfectly answered in the 98-minute running time without large leaps that leave plot points in its dust.

DVD extras: Behind-the-scenes featurettes, Emily Wells' performance of "Becomes the Color" and a free song download, images gallery and more.

Jack the Giant Slayer

This latest film foray into giving classic fairy tales a modern look combines a likable hero with a fun story and flashy special effects to make the movie feel like fun.

Director Bryan Singer ramps up the action, especially in the final battle where, despite the medieval nature of the weapons, the fight is as explosive as any modern-age donnybrook. Typical fairy-tale elements are given nice tweaks, such as having the princess be less of a damsel in distress and more of an equal to her heroic saviors. The combination of the strong special effects and solid acting translates to "Jack the Giant Slayer" accomplishing one titanic feat—it's huge fun to watch.

DVD extras: Gag reel, deleted scenes, and more.

THIS WEEK'S TOP RELEASES

Rectify

I can't praise Sundance Channel's first original scripted series enough. Aden Young delivers an extraordinary performance as Daniel Holden, who is released from prison after spending 19 years on death row for a crime DNA evidence suggests he didn't commit. The six-episode first season, created by Ray McKinnon, follows Holden's first week of freedom. In riveting close-ups, Young shares both Daniel's wonder at the world and the shock to his prison-dulled senses. It's a deliberate, intimate and stunning examination of the transformation of a man, his family and the town that still suspects the worst of him. Thankfully, Sundance Channel has renewed it for a 10-episode second season.

Extras: On-set and behind-the-scenes featurettes, "Inside the Episode With Ray McKinnon" and "meet the cast" featurette that shows how different the actors who so embodied their characters are in real life.

Your guide to avoiding artist-related injuries at this summer's concerts

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

We've all suffered a few twisted ankles from line dancing or taken an errant elbow to the eye socket while skanking at a ska show. But this year, concert-goers have another hazard to avoid: Artist-related incidents. The latest: Rihanna hit a fan in the face with a microphone during a show Monday in Birmingham, England, latimes.com reports. Add that to Miguel's HULK SMASH jump on a fan at the Billboard awards last month and Beyonce defending her booty from a handy fan, and we've got ourselves quite a situation. We took a look at some upcoming local shows to dole out some helpful advice on avoiding potential trouble (trouble, trouble). DAMORAN@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEYEDANA

SHOW STOPPERS

Fun. and Delta Spirit

July 10, Petrillo Music Shell
Potential hazard: Emotional distress while singing "We Are Young" and realizing that you're staring down the barrel of 30.
Solution: Ice cream and a one-night stand

Boyz II Men, NKOTB, 98 Degrees

July 18-19, Allstate Arena
Potential hazard: Being hit in the face by flying panties as the band flings them back into the audience. It's dangerous to clog the stage up with those things.
Solution: Bring a clear umbrella

Courtney Love

July 18, House of Blues
Potential hazard: Having your eyes (or soul) clawed out when you try to join Courtney on stage for the chorus of "Hold on to Me."
Solution: Distract Courtney with her daughter, Frances Bean. Family reunion, y'all!

Godsmack

July 20, The Venue at Horseshoe Casino
Potential hazard: Bleeding eardrums
Solution: Win back the price of your ticket on the roulette table. You might even get a free steak dinner out of the deal.

Jay-Z and Justin Timberlake

July 22, Soldier Field
Potential hazard: Having your nose broken by an over-enthusiastic horn during "Suit and Tie" Solution: Bring your own instrument and blend right in. They'll never notice you're not a pro, right?

Lil Wayne, T.I., 2 Chainz

Aug. 10, First Midwest Bank Amphitheatre
Potential hazard: Being so moved by Weezy's performance that you talk yourself into a face tattoo
Solution: Change your name to Petey Snow Cone and start a new career as a pro wrestler. Beyond that, you're on your own.

« THE DIGIT

Jennifer Lopez on Thursday will become the 2,500th celebrity to receive a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame. Wait... she didn't have a star already?! Someone will pay for this!!

WHAT THE CYRUS?

MILEY CYRUS
GETTY IMAGES FILE

Here is a random list of things that appear in Miley Cyrus' bizarre and (perhaps unintentionally) hilarious video for "We Can't Stop," released Wednesday:

- » Smoke pouring from crotches.
- » A man erotically eating white bread.
- » Miley twerking, riding a stationary bike, groping people, dancing with teddy bears and making out with a doll.
- » If you're still reading this list, just stop and watch the video. Seriously.

Anchormania

Attention "Anchorman" fans and anyone who wants to see Paul Rudd in a leisure suit (this should be all of you): There's a new "Anchorman 2" trailer out, and oh, it is glorious. It seems the story has fast-forwarded to the '80s. Brick gets a love story! Ron is awkward around black people! Baxter drinks with a straw! December can't come soon enough.

“She likes to sing into my mic because my mic is magic.”

—Channing Tatum, in a hilarious new music video for Jimmy Kimmel titled "I Wanna Channing All Over Your Tatum"

Jane d'oh

So long, Mary Jane. Shailene Woodley's love-interest character has been cut from "The Amazing Spider-Man 2," despite already having shot a few scenes, thr.com reports. Presumably this is to focus on Spidey's other great love, Gwen Stacy (played by Emma Stone), but as any self-respecting comics nerd will tell you, we shouldn't get too attached to her either.

HOT DATE

JULY 17 That's the season premiere date for "Here Comes Honey Boo Boo," which will be a "watch it sniff" experience. Scent cards will be available at Time Warner Cable retail stores and in the July 5 People magazine and July 12 Us Weekly, and street teams will pass out cards.
